

Round Robin Tournament Trees

Prepared by Tamara Tysjachyvolosova

BACKGROUND:

My first list experience was a round robin tournament. I was told to pair everyone up for the first round and to just keep making new pairings until everyone had fought everyone else. Of course, I ended up with one fighter with 3 bouts in a row. Therefore, these 'trees' are designed to prevent back-to-back fights.

Every attempt has been made to equalize the down time between bouts for one individual, assuming no combatant drops out of the tournament. In tournaments with an odd number of combatants, there will be a bye in every round. The combatants are unaware of the bye as they fight in the last bout of the round prior to their bye round and in the first bout of the round after their bye round.

HOW TO USE THE ROUND ROBIN TREES:

The following instructions are for a standard round robin tournament. Other tournament variations (i.e., Swiss Five) are possible by using a fixed number of rounds. For a large number of combatants and limited time, it is recommended that the Marshal-in-Charge determine how many rounds will be fought prior to the start of the tournament.

1. Use the tree for the correct number of combatants.
2. Enter names on numbered lines. I recommend using some method of randomization, especially for tournaments with a limited or a high potential for limiting the number of rounds.
3. Number the cards. To avoid mistakes in recording wins and giving cards to the herald, write the combatant's number in the corner of his/her card. Use pencil so you can erase it later if your cards will be used in the future.
4. Each round consists of the same number of bouts and each combatant will fight in exactly one bout per round (except for the bye).
5. Read the tree. Make sure all combatants are ready to fight. In tournaments with 8 or fewer combatants, combatants will not have long enough to pop their helmets between rounds. Arrange for a water break halfway through the rounds and make sure the combatants are aware of when this will be. Remind them that they can always take additional time if needed.
6. Begin the tournament. Circle the number of the winner. The Marshal-in-Charge will decide whether double-kills will be fought over, the point split or not given.
7. Tally the wins for the completed round. I have never run a tournament without being interrupted by someone for any reason. To make sure all wins are tallied once and only once, wait until the round is completed before marking wins by the combatants' names at the top of the page. Mark through the round number when you have finished tallying that round.
8. Continue fighting.
9. Repairable armor failures cause delays in the tournament. Discuss with the Marshal-in-Charge whether it is better to fight the bout as soon as possible (delay of 1 or 2 bouts) or move that single bout to the end of the tournament (delay closer to 1 or more rounds). The decision should be based on how soon the repair will be done to avoid disruption in the tournament flow.
10. Invariably, a combatant withdraws before the tournament is finished. Make a note next to the combatant's name indicating the reason and the round. Mark through that number for the remaining rounds. Combatants who were to fight this withdrawn combatant will now have a bye instead. In general, these byes are not counted as either a win or a loss. The drop-out rate is much higher as the number of combatants increases to the point of mass confusion and more byes than fights in each remaining round.
11. Ties are brought to the attention of the Marshal-in-Charge. When a true winner must be named, determine a method for resolving the tie. Common ways are to fight a tie-breaker, either 1 bout or best 2 out of 3. In situations where time is critical, the victory can be awarded based on who won when they fought during the tournament.
